More Technology, More Headaches for Employers

Contributed By: Noah Frank of SmithAmundsen

Technology is great. I can use my smartphone to change a million TV channels without getting up (of course, there's still nothing to watch until Game of Thrones returns).

Employers, too, are reaping the benefits of technology for the most routine areas of employee and facilities management – including timekeeping and building security. But with the transitions from handwritten and manually punched time cards to fingerprint scanner timeclocks, and mechanical keys to retinal scanners, employers face significant risk under privacy laws
