Employers Beware: Calculating FMLA Intermittent Leave Can Result in More (or Less) Than 480 Hours Per Year

By: Laurie E. Meyer | Amundsen Davis

Most employers with 50+ employees are aware that under the federal FMLA, eligible employees may, for qualifying reasons, take up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave during a 12-month period. Employers are also aware that employees can, under certain circumstances, take this leave on an “intermittent” or “reduced schedule” basis. For instance, an eligible employee might work four rather than eight hours per day for many weeks or months for FMLA-qualifying reasons. In those cases, an employer might believe that since 12 weeks multiplied by 40 hours per week equals 480 hours, the maximum amount of FMLA leave any employee can take in a 12-month period is 480 hours.

Drug Testing & Reasonable Suspicion Training: What Managers and Supervisors Need to Know for 2023 and Beyond

Thursday, May 11, 2023

1:30 pm - 3:00 pm | Webinar

With the legalization of cannabis drug testing practices and procedures are being scrutinized more, especially reasonable suspicion testing. With these changes and increased scrutiny, it is vitally important for businesses to understand how the current and new laws impact drug testing, areas being scrutinized, as well as training for those involved in the drug testing process and reasonable suspicion identification.

Attorneys from Amundsen Davis LLC will explain the current state and federal laws and legal issues impacting drug and alcohol policies, testing and enforcement, including what reasonable suspicion drug and alcohol testing entails, what training you and your managers should have to avoid potential risks, and providing reasonable suspicion training to attendees. Participants will learn how to identify weaknesses in their own drug testing policy and training, how to work to strengthen drug testing programs, training to create safer workplaces and the reasonable suspicion identification of drug and/or alcohol use.
